

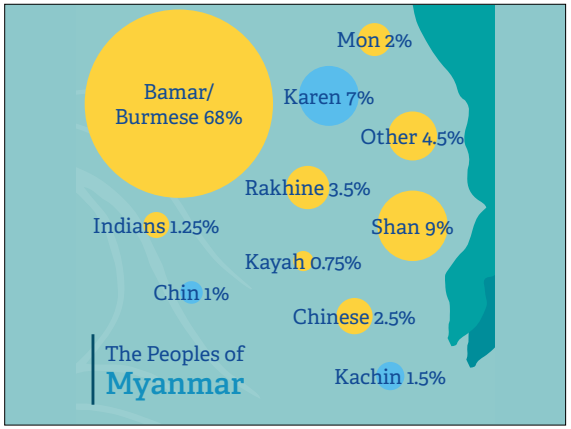
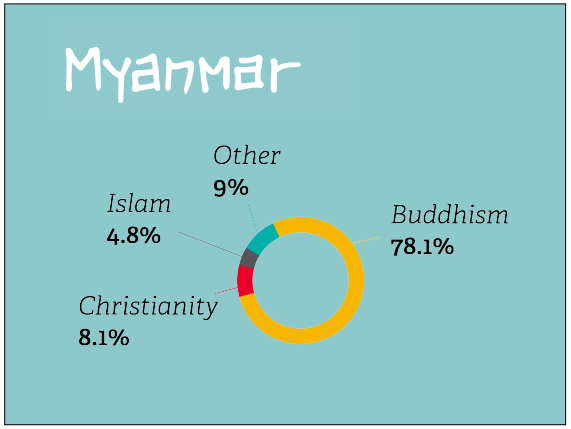
You may know of Myanmar by its previous name of Burma, or as the country the famous missionary Adoniram Judson traveled to …

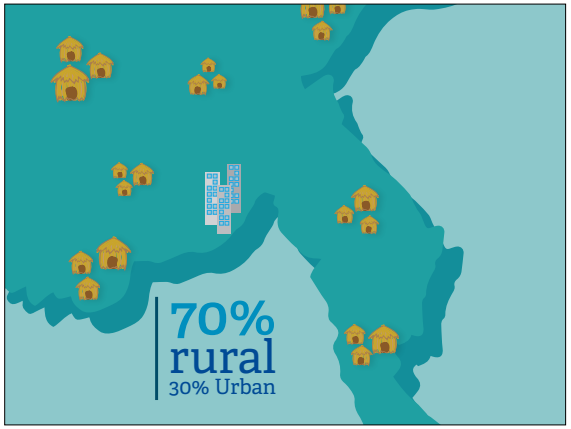
… or possibly as ‘the golden land’, a reference to the thousands of glittering pagodas scattered across the landscape.



What you may not know is that Myanmar is a vibrant, multicolored mosaic of over 100 different people groups. There is much to pray for in this land, beyond the events of 2021, when Myanmar returned to military-only rule, causing widespread political unrest and fracturing of the country’s economy.



Myanmar's long-standing ethnic tensions continue to spill over into violence.
Conflict between religious groups, particularly between the majority Buddhist and Muslim minority remains an ongoing challenge.



Poverty, particularly in rural areas, affects at least a quarter of all households and likely has increased in recent years.
